Greetings Crew -

What an "exciting" few months we've had. Feels like I've been running in circles - just treading the same ground in an attempt to see something new. I know everyone is going stir-crazy but I'll be honest, the Discord meetings have helped, I hate that we can't be together physically but it's nice to see everyone's faces and get an update on how everyone is doing. At this point, I'd like to say something like "hang in there, it's almost over" but... who knows how much longer we have for something like this, so I'll just offer "Hang in there, we can handle this."

In July, Ann and I took a brief trip to see her family at their new home being built in North Carolina and got to see some of the surrounding area that they'll live near. Beech Mountain is an incredible place and if you ever get the opportunity to go visit, I can't recommend it enough - it absolutely appeals to my sensibilities.

The 4th of July felt... weird while watching the Country struggle with a pandemic but, overall, still a positive experience.

Catching COVID myself this quarter (2 days prior to my anniversary with Ann) was absolutely no fun and I do not recommend it to anyone - even this month or so later, I'm still dealing with what I've been calling the "aftershock" of it. To the point of all that I've said, I've felt incredibly fortunate to have Star Trek in my life - having you guys around and communicating with me and one another has been heartening.

Ann and I have started back watching DS9 on our family nights, and getting to see new Trek through Lower Decks/The Ready Room/Discovery is such a breath of fresh air I didn't think I'd have access to. I recently heard that we're getting even more spin-off shows beyond "Strange New Worlds" and are getting a Riker/Troi show about their time on the Titan and the fallout of Picard. Speaking of Picard, I recently got my Blu-ray copy of the season in a steel case which now proudly sits alongside the rest of my Trek disc collection - if you haven't had the opportunity to watch it, I recommend it. It's a bit of a downer in places, but overall, I enjoyed the show.

'Star Trek: Lower Decks' boldly goes into comedy

Remember the Vulcan salute from the original "Star Trek" series? The holodeck from "Star Trek: The Next Generation?" Captain Janeway from "Star Trek: Voyager?" The Starfleet officers at the center of CBS All Access' "Star Trek: Lower Decks" do. Ditto the writers who shape the main characters, four young ensigns usually assigned mundane tasks far from the prestigious bridge, in the legendary sci-fi franchise's second animated series and first comedy (streaming weekly starting today).

Tendi (Noël Wells), left, Brad Boimler (Jack Quaid), Beckett Mariner (Tawny Newsome) and Rutherford (Eugene Cordero) are the enthusiastic and idiosyncratic ensigns that form the heart of "Star Trek: Lower Decks." CBS

"Secretly, every character on 'Lower Decks' is a Trekkie," creator Mike McMahan ("Rick and Morty," "Solar Opposites") says. "They're all fans of 'Star Trek,' which is why they're so excited to be there" in post-"Star Trek: Nemesis" 2380, a time frame after all the "Trek" series except "Star Trek: Picard." "And the group of comedy writers who also happen to be 'Star Trek' fans is pretty broad." McMahan's favorite "Trek" series – and a big influence on the 10-episode "Lower Decks" – is "Next Generation." He's a fan of android Data, engineer Geordi La Forge and their relationship. "A lot of Data and Geordi lived in the (secondary) stories of 'TNG,' which is why I think of 'Lower Decks' as a big (secondary) story" with the accompanying heavy emphasis on character and personality, he says.

05-167524

05-934720

06-758106

07-846821

"Lower Decks," already renewed for Season 2, follows the USS Cerritos, a starship that makes unsexy "second contact" with alien species, and its ensign quartet: talented but rebellious Beckett Mariner (voiced by Tawny Newsome); ambitious but insecure Brad Boimler (Jack Quaid); figuratively and literally green Orion Tendi (Noël Wells); and Rutherford (Eugene Cordero), an engineer whose cyborg implant has a mind of its own.

"Someone described (Mariner and Boimler) as the odd couple of Starfleet. There's very much a push and pull of rigidity vs. breaking rules," says Newsome ("Space Force"), who grew up watching "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine" and "Voyager" with her parents. Mariner, who values Starfleet's peaceful, exploratory spirit but bristles at its bureaucracy, displays "toughness, married with a little bit of swagger and out-and-out bravado," she says. "That lends itself really well to comedy." Ah, comedy, a final format frontier for the venerable brand. "There's so many references to existing Starfleet things. ... worlds, characters, species, items, terminology, that's all fair game for us as long as it makes sense," says McMahan, who promises guest appearances by previous "Trek" cast members. "Instead of just having some random alien, let's use an alien that has a whole backstory, a species you understand."

Tendi is a very different Orion, "not controlling men with pheromones and doing belly dances," as Orion slave girls did in earlier "Trek" productions, McMahan says. And the ship's chief medical officer, Dr. T'Pol, is a feline Caitian, "not purring and sexual," like M'Ress in the first animated series, but "more like Bones," the gruff Dr. Leonard McCoy.

McMahan isn't worried that viewers will see "Lower Decks" as parody. The people behind the show are true fans, and "Trek" has often embraced humor, from Tribbles to "Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home," which is "flat out a comedy," he says.

While pushing the franchise into new areas, "Lower Decks" is respectful of "Trek" canon. McMahan dropped the idea of having T'Pol from "Star Trek: Enterprise" appear, because "Vulcans just don't live long enough. The timing didn't work out."

McMahan and Newsome say the diverse voice cast and characters reflect long-standing "Trek" philosophy.

05-167524

" 'Star Trek' has always been known as this thing that is the aspirational future of humanity," McMahan says. With a broader casting net, "you get a more vibrant, interesting group of people that don't all sound the same, which reflects humanity in general."

05-934720

With the show, which features a Black female captain, "diversity is just expected and is never really commented upon, which is a signal of true 24th-century values," Newsome says.

06-758106

Past "Trek" shows haven't entirely lived up to that principle, she says, noting strong female characters in the '90s series who nevertheless were shown "gossiping about boys." And those shows were improvements on the depictions of women in the '60s series.

USS Haise had their monthly meeting online tonight, Saturday, September 19 -

And here's a screen shot of those in attendance. XO Joe Keenan presided over the meeting!

It was great to catch up with everyone who could beam in.

We all send "Hope you get well soon" wishes to our CO, Ryan Case, who has tested positive for COVID-19.

We are glad to hear that Ann has tested negative so far and Kahlan is staying with her grandmother

Take care and stay safe and healthy out there!

COVID-19 continues to dominate all aspects of our lives. We are now approximately 6 months into the pandemic and our whole world has been turned upside down. While, as of this article submission, we are in the middle of a very contentious election, it is nice to know Star Trek continues to play a positive role in shaping a governmental response. For an upbeat lift, please see the article below I found online:

STAR TREK: VOYAGER

How Star Trek (May Have) Saved British Columbia From COVID-19

Wanted: leaders who've already explored strange new worlds!

Starfleet captains haven't always managed to keep pandemics from doing massive damage — from the plague that wiped out the adult population of an entire planet in The Original Series' "Miri" to the Phage in Star Trek: Voyager.

But the Federation may be able to claim at least some part of a disease-fighting victory here in sector 001. More specifically, my home: the Canadian province of British Columbia.

While COVID-19 is still surging in many places, B.C.'s curve-flattening success has been hailed around the world, earning kudos from news outlets including CNN and the New York Times.

20-634851

Much of the credit goes to the province's dedicated, experienced public health officials and courageous frontline workers. But officials and workers in other jurisdictions are just as skilled, brave, and dedicated. Their advice, though, often went unheeded until the virus had already tightened its grip in those communities.

The difference may lie in the fact that the leader of BC's government, Premier John Horgan, is also arguably the province's most prominent Star Trek fan.

20-753912

The Trekkie in the command chair -

Horgan was hooked on the show from an early age. "The Pollyanna view that we can all work together to a better outcome — all faiths, all ethnicities — that appealed to me," he told a columnist after taking the reins of BC's left-wing New Democratic Party (NDP).

21-854122

He's known for leaning out of his office window and playfully heckling fellow politicians, telling one who walked by one day in a red outfit that she was lucky this wasn't an away mission. One wall of his office bears a framed picture of Kirk, Picard, Janeway, Sisko, and Archer along with a plaque reading "Engage: Stardate 2017.07.18" — the date his government was sworn in. And while he has a deep-seated affection for all things Trek, his favorite captain is Janeway.

In short, the government of British Columbia is led by someone who spent his formative years — and his adult life — immersed in Federation space. And it turns out that's pretty good preparation for navigating an unprecedented crisis.

22-002145

Exploring strange new worlds... before you have to live in them -

Today hand-washing, mask-wearing and physical distancing are the norm (or at least, the norm we're trying to reach). But back in February and March, when governments were making those all-important decisions on their first response to the virus, even respectable media voices were saying "It'll be like a bad flu year." Denial was still the order of the day.

Message from XO - Captain Joe Keenan - cont'd

19-998210

Just recognizing the scope of an unprecedented danger can require enormous leaps of imagination. That's especially true when it's an invisible threat, and one plenty of voices are calling overblown.

It demands the ability to imagine what the world will be like without drastic changes and the massive devastation that could result. And you have to be equally able to imagine a world where you've taken steps that would otherwise be politically unthinkable.

As we've learned in the past few months, that skill's in shorter supply than we might have hoped. Too many political leaders lacked the imagination to act until the crisis was on their doorstep.

20-634851

But if you're a Star Trek fan with a few series under your belt, you're already well trained in exploring strange new worlds. ("Weird is part of the job," as Janeway once told Harry Kim.) You've seen widespread catastrophe: Deneva ravaged by neural parasites, Vulcan crushed by a singularity, and Mars with its surface scorched and its atmosphere still burning.

You've even already experienced countless epidemics, including an inhibition-removing contaminant that struck Enterprise crews twice.

So imagining how bad a pandemic could get if left unchecked? Not a big leap.

20-753912

And for the same reason, you've had a series of master classes in unorthodox solutions: not mere 'Trek-no babble (governments don't have a forward sensor array they can reroute graviton particles through) but creative innovations, interventions, and shifts in perspective, such assessing a creature not as a deadly threat to be killed but as a mother trying to protect her young.

21-854122

Then there's the solution Janeway chose when Voyager encountered a huge Mutara-class nebula riddled with deadly sub nucleonic radiation. She ordered the entire crew into stasis except for the two who were unaffected by the radiation — Seven of Nine and the Doctor — who then crewed the ship on its month-long journey through the nebula.

Watch that episode, and suddenly the idea of an extended economic shutdown where everyone except essential workers stays home doesn't seem so far-fetched. Neither does the need to provide additional moral and financial support for those workers as the shutdown wears on.

22-002145

And neither does providing economic support or a freeze on evictions to ensure we can all still keep food on the table and a roof over our heads — especially if, like Horgan, you're a social democrat whose worldview aligns with Gene Roddenberry's egalitarian, post-exploitation vision of the future.

Message from XO - Captain Joe Keenan - cont'd

19-998210

"Set a course... for home."

With the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, Janeway being Horgan's favorite captain takes on a new dimension. Before the outbreak, he attributed that in part to being raised by his mother with the help of his older sister. But you can read a lot of 2020's zeitgeist into the story of a ship on a lengthy journey through unknown, often dangerous space.

20-634851

Like Voyager's crew, we don't know how long an odyssey we have in front of us, and we're often improvising on the fly as we learn, adapt and encounter unexpected shortages. (Maybe we're hoping for coffee in that nebula; maybe it's more like toilet paper and PPE.) Like them, we're hitting roadblocks and setbacks; the past few weeks, for instance, have seen BC's case numbers tick back upward.

20-753912

And you could forgive Premier Horgan if he was to see something of his own role in a captain trying to get her sometimes-fractious crew safely home. British Columbia's politics may not be quite as polarized as Federation-Maquis differences, but we do have our moments.

21-854122

The future right now feels less certain than it has in a long time — and not just because of COVID-19. All we really know is that it won't be the last of the huge, unexpected challenges we face, whether they come in the form of another pandemic, climate-related disruption or some other threat. And that we'll need imagination from our leaders and each other — both to recognize those challenges and to embrace the changes they require.

22-002145

That also means changing what we think of as qualifications for elected office. I'm not saying that policies, platforms and promises are less important than an insightful take on Darmok. But a capacity for imagination is crucial.

"In these unprecedented times" is just another way of saying we're going where no-one has gone before. And we need to know that our leaders are ready for that journey.

It's really difficult to write a report for our ship when we're still in "lock down". We're not doing much together, so what to write about . . . ?

In July I continued my weekly Covid19 testing, still negative. Yeah! I did provide a spaghetti dinner for a family whose mom contracted Covid19. I did set up and participate in a small family reunion in Clinton at my church. We did our best to do it safely. Mom, who has been protected by me, really enjoyed seeing some family she either hadn't seen in a few years or ever.

20-634851

In August on the 7th Craig and I had to put our dachshund, Amber, down at 16 years and 5 months old. I was the saddest day ever! It left us canine free for the first time in the last 27 years! The next day our house seemed so empty. Nothing could ever replace Amber, but the emptiness in the house was simply unbearable. Craig got online and found what he thought was another dachshund in an animal shelter in north Mississippi near Tupelo.

20-753912

Its name is Kodi who was left on the side of the road at about only 6 weeks old! He had a kennel mate at the shelter, a black female named Avery, who also had been left on the side of another road at about 7 weeks old. I can't understand how people can do this. The next week he drove up there and brought BOTH of them home! Since they had been together, he just couldn't separate them. I looked at Kodi, the supposedly Dachshund, and said to Craig, "I don't think this is a dachshund. Look at the size of his feet! There may be a sprinkle of dachshund here, but this is something else." He grew so fast in the next week that we could see other features in him. After looking on the internet, we came to the conclusion this is a Black Mouth Cur! ...getting up to be about 90 pounds! And Avery is growing just as fast, definitely some Lab, maybe some bull terrier or even Newfoundland! Now, were seeing some Collie in her. We've always had small dogs. This is changing, rapidly!

In September, I took Ethan and his best friend, Dustin to a small car cruise show here in Gluckstadt. It was outside and we did this as safely as possible. We are all so stressed with not being able to be together. We just had to do something. I also started watching the new series, Star Trek: Lower Decks. For what it is, I kind of like it, but I would like something more. I am looking forward to the 3rd season of Star Trek Discovery next month and Star Trek: Strange New Worlds in the next year or so! From the previews and info, I've seen, this may be the best Star Trek ever!

Stay safe, shipmates.

Message from Chief of Engineering - Lieutenant Commander Jason Young

19-998210

Greetings, fellow Trek fans!

I hope everyone is doing well in these trying times. Soon, we will have a third season of "Star Trek: Discovery" to distract us from the stresses we are facing in everyday life. While you wait for ST:D, I highly recommend that you check out "Star Trek: Lower Decks" for your Trek-based entertainment. It has quickly become one of my favorite spin-off series in the Star Trek Universe.

20-634851

"Star Trek: Lower Decks" is the second animated Star Trek series to date. Unlike "Star Trek: The Animated Series" from the 70's, which was a designed-to-be-taken-seriously continuation of "Star Trek: The Original Series", ST:LD is a slickly-produced, irreverent romp through the extended Star

Trek Universe as experienced by some lovable Starfleet D-listers: crew members that you know must exist in the Star Trek Universe, but you rarely got to see them on screen (exceptions being Edward Larkin of the USS Cabot, and, to a lesser extent, Reginald Barclay of the USS Enterprise D). ST:LD's animation style, pacing, and warped (core) humor is heavily influenced by the shows "Rick and Morty" and "Solar Opposites" and, as such, is designed for a more "mature" (but not too mature) audience than the other Star Trek series (except, perhaps for Discovery).

20-753912

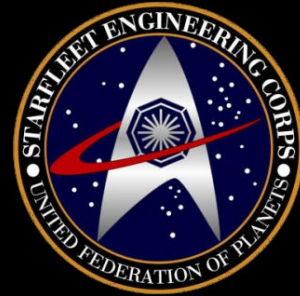

With influences like "Rick and Morty", it may sound like Lower Decks would be a crass corruption of what most people expect from Star Trek, yet ST:LD still contains much of what made the rest of the Star Trek Universe enjoyable: interesting and likable characters, friendship, exploration, and a generally positive outlook on life, people and the future. Plus, without going into spoiler territory, the characters and situations they get involved in are rather hilarious. I never thought there would be a doctor more crotchety than McCoy and the EMH, but in ST:LD, there's this cat...

21-854122

Check out "Star Trek: Lower Decks", and stick with it beyond the pilot (an admittedly weak start to the series). Each subsequent episode is funnier, and more Trek-like, than the one before. I eagerly await the season finale (which was not released during the time frame this article covers) and hope that there will be more seasons in the future.

While appearing as a delicate and light veil draped across the sky, this image from the NASA/ESA Hubble Space Telescope actually depicts a small section of the Cygnus supernova blast wave, located around 2,400 light-years away. The name of the supernova remnant comes from its position in the northern constellation of Cygnus (the Swan), where it covers an area 36 times larger than the full Moon.

The original supernova explosion blasted apart a dying star about 20 times more massive than our Sun between 10,000 and 20,000 years ago. Since then, the remnant has expanded 60 light-years from its center. The shockwave marks the outer edge of the supernova remnant and continues to expand at around 220 miles per second. The interaction of the ejected material and the low-density interstellar material swept up by the shockwave forms the distinctive veil-like structure seen in this image.

Hey Everyone,

We have wrapped up the summer and the beginning of school! With COVID-19 many of us have not been able to travel much but we did get out and head up to the mountains in July. My parents are building their retirement home in the mountains of North Carolina and we went up to stay near the property and explore. We got to see a lot of my family and had a great time hiking, shooting arrows, cooking out and enjoying the great outdoors. A much-needed break from the quarantine inside our home!

August saw the start of school, but it was a crazy start, where we got pushed back two weeks and then went hybrid. It felt like a lot of teacher's first year all over again! I did a lot of training and tech stuff for our school. It has been interesting so far and we are now back to our normal schedule. It is great to be back in the classroom, but the COVID-19 regulations have made for an interesting time. But I have a great group of students this year.

September threw our house for a loop. As Ryan and I were getting ready to celebrate our 10th year anniversary, Ryan caught COVID-19. We got really lucky and it wasn't a bad case. Kahlan went and stayed with Ryan's mom and stayed healthy. I stayed home and took care of Ryan and luckily, I also didn't catch it. A big thank you to all of you that reached out and helped us out! We absolutely love and appreciate our amazing crew!

We are ready for the last part of the year and hopefully we will get to all meet up and be together again soon!

Wishing you all the best!

Happy Birthday to all USS Haise crew members, Star Trek fans, & Star Trek celebrities who have upcoming birthdays in October, November & December.

Due to the coronavirus, and until further notice, our meetings will be in video chat online with Discord.

We all miss seeing each other in person and being together, but we look forward to making future plans when this virus is properly handled.

We will keep the Star Trek & USS Haise news coming to you quarterly and hope you and your families stay safe and healthy.

Live Long & Prosper!
